

ABSTRACT

A method for producing printed circuit boards and/or corresponding constructs that includes points where through-connections are created. The method viitates the need for a very complex brushing process by using low cost lacquer variants. Moreover, the disclosed methods allow additional strip conductors or appropriate layers to be guided directly across the through connections rather than just to the through connections.